In Exodus 8:21 to 30, the fourth plague in the King James Version with the ESV was a swarm of insects (flies, wasps, gnats, hornets, scarab beetles, bees, and mosquitos).

According to Willard's version, God brought a dangerous stampede of wild animals from a colder and warmer climate, roving around the country and destroying everything in their path. The animals that kill all the Egyptians and livestock like King Herod's soldiers killing every male child in Bethlehem are lions, tigers, bears, leopards, vultures, peacocks, elephants, hyenas, wolves, rhinos, antelope, cheetahs, giraffes, spiders, buffalo, swans, deer, zebras, wolverines, monkeys, gazelles, ravens, ostriches, owls, scorpions, jackals, crocodiles, hippos, snakes, eagles, gorillas, baboons, rats, and foxes. These animals enter the homes and attack the Egyptians as a combination of the Egyptian soldiers snatching and throwing every baby Hebrew boy into the Nile River and the soldiers with horses and swords killing every male child in Bethlehem under two years old.

The lions, tigers, bears, jackals, and leopards terrorize the Egyptian people and livestock with loud roaring and growling. The vultures and ravens grabbed all of the Egyptians. The peacocks, elephants, hyenas, rhinos, antelope, cheetahs, deer, antelope, buffalo, crocodiles, and giraffes roam the Egyptian houses. The owls, spiders, zebras, scorpions, monkeys, wolves, and snakes scare and snatch all of the Egyptian newborns in the Egyptian houses as a reference to soldiers snatching and throwing every baby Hebrew boy into the Nile River.

But in reality, the animals that kill and eat the Egyptians are African crocodiles, hippos, striped hyenas, cheetahs, African leopards, African wolves, and even the Egyptian and Rüppell’s vultures, and the others who just killed people and livestock without eating them consisted of Ruppell's and Nile red foxes, Egyptian fruit bats, black rats, desert horned vipers, Egyptian cobras, false-smooth snakes, and steppe eagles.
